GW PARTICIPATES IN NEW U.S. EXPORT PROGRAM -- A new GW program for graduate students in international business will be offered in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Commerce and the business community of the Washington metropolitan area.

Called the "MBA Export Expansion Program," it is designed to boost export sales by small American companies, and to give graduate students practical training in the field of international commerce. G.P. Lauter, Associate Professor of Business Administration, will direct the GW program which is being offered for academic credit.

GW students will work with small business firms in the Washington area who have expressed an interest in new foreign markets. The students will examine the firms' capacity to begin or expand export operations in relation to data gathered by the Bureau of International Commerce. Each student will receive a joint contribution of $50 for research expenses from the Commerce Department and his assigned firm. The study will culminate in a formal report with recommendations for action by the firm.

Nationally, 21 universities will be involved in similar programs through the Commerce Department. They include: Boston, University of California at Berkeley, Columbia, Cornell, Georgia State, Harvard, Indiana, Massachusetts, M.I.T., Michigan, C.U.N.Y., N.Y.U., Northern Illinois, Pennsylvania, San Francisco State, Southern California, Syracuse, Thunderbird, and Wisconsin.

Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans said this new program "is an important part of our national effort to reach...a goal of $850 billion in exports annually by 1973." Without an increase in exports, he said "our national economy and the position of the dollar in the international monetary system are seriously challenged."

EVENT OF THE WEEK -- The Kiln Club of Washington will give an exhibition of ceramics in the lower lounge of Lisner Auditorium from Jan. 7-29. The show, which will include enamels on metal and glass, as well as pottery, will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Mon.-Fri. Many articles will be for sale.

FACULTY SHOW NEEDS TALENT -- A "Faculty Show" consisting of individual talent acts and group skits will be given Feb. 9 as part of GW's Sesquicentennial Celebration. Those wishing to participate may call Miss Gayle Clapp at x6250 or Miss Beth Garraway at x6710 for additional information.

THE A.C.E. RATING OF GRADUATE PROGRAMS -- Various newspapers across the nation carried articles yesterday pertaining to a report just issued by the American Council on Education titled "A Rating of Graduate Programs." The following is the full text of a statement issued to the press last week by President Elliott:

While the American Council on Education's just-released study, "A Rating of Graduate Programs," may be useful for certain limited purposes, it is necessary to take note of the questionable methodology and narrow scope of the study.

First, the title is misleading. Only programs that lead to the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) are evaluated. All other "graduate" and "doctoral" programs are omitted from the ACE study. For example, the study does not include graduate programs leading to a master's degree, and it does not include "professional-degree" programs, such as those in law, medicine, education, and government and business administration -- fields in which George Washington University is nationally respected.

Second, the method used to construct the study leads to results that are impressionistic at best, results that are statistically biased, favoring good large programs at the expense of good smaller programs. The study was constructed from two questionnaires sent to certain members of each rated department at each rated school. One questionnaire asked for biographic data and answers to mostly general questions about graduate education. The other questionnaire asked those faculty surveyed to rate the departments in his specialty at all other schools offering doctoral programs in that specialty according to three general criteria: "quality of graduate faculty," "effectiveness of doctoral program," and "change in last five years." The use of such a method of evaluation tends to favor departments and universities which turn out Ph.D.'s in large numbers.

Arthur E. Burns, Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at George Washington, points out: "Faculties of large graduate departments naturally publish a greater volume of scholarly articles, through which their departments become more widely known. They also produce more Ph.D.'s who by sheer numbers make their school more widely known, and who are heavily represented among those responding to the ACE's questionnaires. Therefore, the reputations of those departments that produce Ph.D.'s in large volume tend to be perpetuated at the expense of smaller departments that may be high in quality but low in volume."

William Long, Acting Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at George Washington, notes that: "A relatively larger number of Ph.D.'s produced at George Washington enter government service or business and industry than is true of other universities' doctoral graduates. Such Ph.D.'s are not among those surveyed in ACE's study and are less likely to be known by strictly academic scholars. Further, the graduate faculty at GW is more likely to concentrate on consulting for the government than on publishing articles for scholarly journals. This consulting work may be of great value, but it is overlooked as a factor that contributes to scholarly reputation."

Both Dean Long and Dean Burns feel that a fairer method of assessing graduate programs would have to be based on an evaluation of departments by visiting teams of scholars and an analysis of the contributions of the graduates of doctoral programs.

As the ACE study makes clear (page 25), by 1980 there will be a supply of 50,900 Ph.D.'s, but the demand for Ph.D.'s as teaching scholars will be only 7,400. The ACE stresses the need for nonteaching Ph.D.'s -- by and large the kind George Washington produces -- but then by the methodology of its study penalizes those very institutions that are attempting to fulfill the need.

By omission, the ACE study also penalizes universities such as George Washington that devote the overwhelming part of their graduate programs to master's degree candidates and "professional-degree" candidates in areas where the public need is obvious: in medicine, in law, in education, in government and business administration, and in public and international affairs.

PRESIDENT NIXON SIGNS BILL AUTHORIZING NEEDED OPERATING FUNDS FOR MEDICAL SCHOOL -- On Jan. 6, President Nixon signed the D.C. Revenue Bill, which includes emergency operating funds for GW and Georgetown medical schools. This legislation could enable the GW medical school to operate on a balanced budget for each of the next two years. The bill authorizes a maximum of $5,000 annually per student to the medical school according to proven need which is to be determined by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. The final step is to secure funds through Congressional appropriations.

LAW LIBRARY BUILDING DEFICIT ERASED -- GW law alumni and friends have contributed generously in order to close out a $400,000 building cost deficit and to complete the Jacob Burns Law Library Building Fund by the end of 1970. First opened in 1967, the library was built at a cost of about $2 million, leaving GW with an unexpected deficit of $400,000. Jacob Burns, LL.B. '24 and LL.D. '70, for whom the library is named, was a major donor and contributed an additional challenge gift of $50,000 last summer on the condition that the balance of the deficit be paid and pledged by the end of the year. GW law alumni contributed these funds by Dec. 31, 1970.

BOARD OF TRADE TO HONOR GW -- The Metropolitan Washington Board of Trade will honor GW with a Sesquicentennial Anniversary Luncheon on Tuesday, Jan. 19. Faculty and staff members who would like to attend can obtain tickets from the Development Office in Bacon Hall. Tickets are $6.00 each. President Elliott will speak at the luncheon, which will be held in the Main Ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel at 12:30.

ROSENFELD CHOSEN RHODES SCHOLAR -- Robert A. Rosenfeld, a senior in Public and International Affairs at GW, recently received the coveted Rhodes Scholarship. He is one of 32 chosen for the honor, and the only student from the Washington area. As a Rhodes Scholar, he will study politics, philosophy and economics at Oxford University in England for two years.

EXPERIMENTAL CLASSICS SEMINAR--- Faculty members are being asked to recommend juniors and seniors for an experimental, cross-disciplinary seminar in the classics to be held this spring under a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The seminar, Classics 171--- "Classics and the Goals for America," will study the relation of classical thought to modern problems. The three-hour course, to be conducted by John F. Latimer, professor of classics and chairman of that department, may be used for graduate or undergraduate credit.

According to Dr. Latimer, persons prominent in public and academic life will be asked to attend various sessions to discuss their specialties. Visitors will be permitted to attend. Plans are for the seminar to be used as a model for similar programs at other educational institutions.

The class will meet once a week for a two-hour period. The day and time will be arranged once the participants have been selected. Those interested or those having recommendations should contact Dr. Latimer in T-3 or by telephone at 676-6125.

ALUMNUS CHOSEN HARVARD PRESIDENT--- Derek Curtis Bok, who received a master's degree in government from George Washington University in 1958, has been named the 25th president of Harvard University, succeeding Dr. Nathan M. Pusey.

Mr. Bok, 40, has been serving as dean of the Harvard Law School. In addition to George Washington, he holds degrees from Stanford and Harvard Law School. Mr. Bok was a Fulbright Scholar at the Sorbonne where he met his future wife, Sissela Ann Myral, daughter of the Swedish sociologist.

Mr. Bok broke a tradition of more than 300 years that the Harvard president must himself have attended Harvard College.

UGF DRIVE GAINS $46,000--- The United Givers Fund drive at GWU collected $46,000 during the just completed campaign--- almost 10 per cent higher than the goal set by fund leaders.

The figures were announced by William D. Johnson, director of the budget and chairman of the 1970-71 campaign at George Washington.

The awards, announced in the magazine's January 1971 edition, were made in recognition of "intense involvement--- whether it be in community affairs, the arts, or environmental ecology" as "the signature of young women today."

Miss Cooper combined those first two areas--- community affairs and art--- to win her honor. Mademoiselle credits her as "the organizer and founder of the first public professional training for young inner-city people in the arts (dance, theater, visual arts, film) in Washington, D.C." The magazine notes that she is working with the city arts commission and "plans to run for the district's school board."

SMITH NEW BASEBALL COACH---Bill Smith, a 36-year-old former major-league pitcher, will take over the Colonials baseball coaching job from Chuck Stobbs, who has accepted a position in the Kansas City Royals organization.

Smith, a Washington native, was graduated from Roosevelt High School and later played in the St. Louis Cardinals and Philadelphia Phillies systems.

BOARD ADOPTS 1971-72 BUDGET---An $81,000,000 budget for 1971-72 for the University and for The Medical Center was adopted by the Board of Trustees on Jan. 21. The University Budget shows more than a $2,700,000 increase over the current year, and The Medical Center Budget an increase of more than $5,000,000. While both budgets reflect increased expenses due to inflation, the University Budget increase does provide for continued strengthening of library resources and services, for modest increases in faculty salaries, and for various capital improvements. In The Medical Center, all except $250,000 of the $5,000,000 increase occurs in the Hospital and Clinic and reflects more medical services for more people as well as for the increasing costs of medical care.

The Medical Center Budget is balanced, thanks to anticipated income for the medical school from federal appropriations, but the University Budget (excluding The Medical Center) shows a budgeted deficit of $267,092. University officials do not expect a "cash-flow" or "spending" deficit, however. Budget Director William D. Johnson said: "Although budgeting in the red, we expect to continue to operate in the black by generating internal savings which will prevent the budgeted deficit from developing into a reality." Thus, the "hiring freeze" will be continued into the fall, "at which time we'll know more clearly what our situation will be." The situation will be determined primarily by the extent to which goals are reached in regard to (a) spring and fall registration, (b) annual giving, and (c) cost-cutting programs, such as the "freeze," already initiated. The 1971-72 budget anticipates no increase in the number of students (many private colleges and universities are reporting severe decreases in enrollment this year).

Tuition increases for 1971-72 will be as previously projected and announced: $150 a year for all full-time students, except medical; $500 for first-year medical students; and $300 for other medical students. For 1972-73 and 1973-74, tuition increases for non-medical students continue to be projected at $150 a year. For 1974-75, the Board of Trustees approved a projected increase of $75 for the academic year, which will bring the total tuition at that time to $2,425.

The Board of Trustees also reviewed the current 1970-71 budget and noted that if the hiring freeze had not been effected, and if all vacant positions had been filled, the University would have an actual deficit of about $300,000 at the end of the year. The Medical Center Budget for 1970-71 is balanced.

TRUSTEES GIVE GO-AHEAD FOR LIBRARY AND PARKING BUILDINGS---Financial arrangements for the new University Library and the new Parking Structure have been completed, and the Board of Trustees at its meeting on Jan. 21 authorized the University to proceed with the construction of both buildings.

The library is expected to get underway this spring, and the parking building this summer. Both will be located at 22nd and H, the library on the southeast corner, the parking structure on the northwest corner.

The seven-story library building will cost about $7,000,000 and will take two years to complete. The last financial hurdle was cleared in December, when GW received an interest-grant-subsidy approval from the federal government. This means that the government will subsidize more than half of the interest cost on a $5,000,000 private loan toward construction costs. Other funds for the library have come from private gifts and a federal grant. The major private "contributors" were two tomcats---named Hellcat and Brownie. They had "inherited" about half a million dollars from their owner, Dr. William W. Grier (A.B. and M.D. degrees from GW), and on the death of the cats the money was designated for the University.

Chapin Hall and Building W will be razed to make way for the new library. Tenants of those buildings will be moved primarily to the old Student Union, which is undergoing alterations.

The parking structure, expected to be completed by the fall of 1972, will accommodate more than 1,000 cars and will be used by faculty, staff, students, and visitors. It will have three entrances and ten floors, seven above ground and three below. Financed through a private loan, the project will cost about $4,600,000.

PETITION PRESENTED TO BOARD---A petition signed by 208 students was presented to the Board of Trustees through Trustee Richard Harrison on Jan. 21. The petition, prepared by an ad hoc "Right to Know Board," requests the Board of Trustees to open its meetings to the public. Board Chairman E. K. Morris said the petition will be given "thorough consideration."

TRUSTEES APPROVE NEW JUDICIAL SYSTEM---At its meeting on Jan. 21, the Board of Trustees approved the Judicial System for Nonacademic Student Discipline, as recommended by the Faculty Senate on Dec. 11 and as modified by further action of the Faculty Senate on Jan. 15. The new system is effective immediately. It is subject to change at such time or in such manner as the Board of Trustees may elect. The Board directed its Student Affairs Committee "to make such further recommendations as it deems desirable and necessary" after discussion with the appropriate University bodies, and to make a report at the March meeting of the Board.

EVENT OF THE WEEK---The program board of the University Center is sponsoring "The Groove Tube," a spoof on TV and TV commercials. The show will be given at 4, 7, and 9 p.m. on Thursday and Friday; and at 7, 9, and 11 p.m. on Saturday. Admission is 75 cents.

EXAMS OVER BEFORE CHRISTMAS---Students will finish their semester exams before Christmas next year as a result of a modified semester plan recommended by the Faculty Senate and approved by President Elliott.

The schools of law and medicine will not be affected by the new plan, although the plan will apply to all other graduate and undergraduate students.

The senate passed the measure 12-9 after extended debate.

Under the new plan, registration for Fall 1971 semester will be Sept. 9-11 (Thursday-Saturday), and classes will start Monday, Sept. 13. The last day of classes will be Friday, Dec. 10, and final examinations will begin Monday, Dec. 13 and continue through Wednesday, Dec. 22. (See attached calendar.)

Registration for Spring 1972 semester will begin Jan. 20, with classes starting Jan. 24.

Under the new plan, the reading period will be virtually eliminated, although the actual number of in-class sessions will be comparable. One weekend, Dec. 11-12, is designated as the "interim" for the fall semester, replacing the longer reading period.

DRACHLER TO HEAD INSTITUTE---Dr. Norman Drachler, Superintendent of Public Schools, Detroit, Mich., has been appointed director of GW's newly created Institute for Educational Leadership.

The Institute, partially financed by the Ford Foundation, will conduct programs and activities designed to improve the quality of educational policy makers throughout the United States.

Dr. Drachler will assume full-time direction of the Institute during the summer of 1971.

President Lloyd H. Elliott said: "We are extremely pleased that a person with Dr. Drachler's talents and experience will direct the Institute. He brings to the Institute intimate knowledge of urban education, notable progress in dealing with educational problems, and significant success in developing educational leaders."

The Institute for Educational Leadership was created by George Washington University "to meet the need for improving and developing leadership in American education at all levels of policy formulation and administration," according to Dr. Elliott.

The Institute, he said, will "bring together both those who are now leaders in education and those with the promise to become leaders so they may jointly reflect on and confront the important contemporary issues facing educational executives."

The Institute, for example, will absorb and expand two existing programs funded by the Ford Foundation--the "Washington Internships in Education," for young adults in the field of education; and "Educational Staff Seminars," for policy makers in Washington offices and agencies.

In addition, the Institute will select a group of nationally prominent and professionally distinguished men and women to serve as Institute Fellows (advisors-in-residence). Another group, made up of selected community leaders and faculty and staff members from colleges and universities, will serve as Institute Associates and participate in policy formation situations in and out of government.

The Institute also will develop a continuing series of "In-Service Training Activities" for the career development of educators in all types of institutions.

Dr. Drachler, 58, has been with the Detroit Public Schools since 1936. He was named Superintendent in 1967. He has been a consultant to the School Systems

The lecture, which will be the first of a month-long list of Sesquicentennial programs, will be followed Saturday by a buffet luncheon at the GWU Club and a series of campus tours for visitors and alumni. A Deans' Day reception will honor academic deans. The Sesquicentennial Committee requests that faculty members announce the Kayser lecture to their classes.

PRESIDENT ELLIOTT'S REMARKS TO FACULTY ASSEMBLY, FEB. 9---The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education reported back in early December that 1540 colleges and universities are either in financial difficulty or are headed for financial trouble. While George Washington University is one of those institutions, little comfort is gained by recognizing that we are in the company of some of the best institutions of the world as well as with some of less distinction. I shall not "carry coals to Newcastle" today by recounting the specific problems of other campuses which have been brought about by rapidly shifting enrollments, declining income and escalating costs -- developments which together add up to devastation for some institutions. Here at George Washington you are aware that a job freeze was imposed back in the fall, and since that time other steps have been taken, the objective of which is to hold down expenditures.

Instead of repeating the growing publicity of trouble, my remarks today are aimed at plowing up suggestions for this University's response to a national crisis in higher education. Our ability to survive -- and to survive in such form as to merit the continued confidence of the people whom we serve -- depends directly, I believe, on what we do in the immediate months ahead as well as over a longer range period. If our responses are to be meaningful and acceptable, they must come from every corner of the University. The following suggestions therefore are offered for your further examination as they may pertain to your department, school, college or program.

Immediately, it seems to me, we may wish to do some or all of the following:

1. Offer more degree programs which can be completed through part-time study. With Ph.D.s now in over supply in several fields, it is likely that further Ph.D. study will follow part-time effort rather than full-time. You know, of course, that a number of great graduate centers of the country are now curtailing the number of students admitted at this level. This suggestion should include students at the master's level also.

2. Throughout the University I am convinced we must have better academic counseling for all students. This is a service which only the faculty can perform, and in the long run it may be the most important service which the student pays for when he parts with his tuition dollar. Dean Linton has taken the lead with his memorandum of January 28 to departmental chairman asking each to establish a departmental academic advising center. If departmental responses measure up to the spirit of the Dean's request, this action could well result in the greatest advance for undergraduate education at George Washington in many years.

3. Following another recommendation by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, I am convinced that we must offer in their words, "less time, more options." More options mean greater flexibility in meeting degree requirements. Less time means the provision of a route by which able students may secure a bachelor's degree in three years instead of the usual four. We must respond to those who want to get on with their educational goals instead of trapping them in a lock-step calendar which for many means only marking time. Surely, through examinations, counseling and observation we can differentiate achievement from non-achievement, ambition from lethargy and maturity from immaturity.

4. Greater emphasis should be placed on general studies in contrast to greater specialization. This means development of and recognition for multi-disciplinary courses and programs, consolidation of departmental offerings and a willingness to reexamine our own pet courses.

Over the longer range period ahead I believe George Washington must look to the Consortium as the means of broadening educational opportunity of G.W. students and of developing greater strength in more programs which the five institutions together decide. Also, on the long-range basis, George Washington must continue to find new sources of financial support. I am particularly encouraged with the development of some of our income producing properties as a way which we may use to bring additional income to the institution. As someone has observed, not many universities either own or can acquire frontage on Pennsylvania Avenue.

In conclusion let me observe that in comparison to most of the other 1500 or more campuses, we are fortunate. As the Carnegie Commission pointed out, some campuses are in a more favorable position than others purely by circumstance. In our case, location is on our side. Furthermore, we have had experience with educating students who study part-time and of employing faculty who teach part-time. We have more experience than most institutions with the greater flexibility which is just now beginning to be recognized as not only acceptable but highly desirable as a way in higher education. It is my expectation that we can continue to compete in the educational market place, that we can continue to strengthen the faculty's economic position and that this University can continue to grow in stature and recognition among the family of universities of the world. The pangs of short-term frugality should therefore only make us do our job better.

NEWS CONFERENCE ON URBAN LAW INSTITUTE---The following statement was released at a conference called by the National Law Center and held last Wednesday. Responding to questions were Dean Robert Kramer and Associate Deans Ralph C. Nash and Edward A. Potts. The complete statement is as follows:

The National Law Center of George Washington University is deeply committed to the fulfillment of its role as a national center of legal education. We have what is today perhaps the country's most extensive program in poverty and urban law. We have been and are dedicated to attempting new approaches to legal education in a number of critically relevant and important areas of poverty and urban law, and we will strive to improve and expand our program in these areas. We have no intention of limiting our clinical commitment -- our commitment to the first-hand study of law in the world beyond the classroom. In fact, we are in the process of expanding this commitment by changing its emphasis under the Urban Law Institute from a limited graduate, or post Juris Doctor (JD) program, to an extensive program directly involving many more undergraduate law students.

We are not terminating the entire program of the Urban Law Institute. Quite the contrary. We will continue the Master of Laws (LL.M.) program in Urban Legal Studies no matter what the future holds for the Urban Law Institute and its funding. We will retain Professor Rothschild's course, Problems of the Consumer, as well as his clinical program under the Consumer Protection Center; Professor Starr's course, Housing the Poor, and his associated field work; Professor Kuhn's course, Current Problems in Civil Rights; Professors Allen and Courtless' course, The Police and the Community; Professor Carlson's course, Economic Development Planning for the Inner City; and a number of others. Any suggestion that urban legal studies at GW will be ignored is totally without foundation in fact. We anticipate program redirection and expansion -- not reduction. The academic program developed as part of the Urban Law Institute will continue -- in fact, it will even be expanded.

The only action taken by the National Law Center in regard to the Urban Law Institute is that the Law Center will no longer serve as an intermediary which transmits OEO funds to the Urban Law Institute for field work at its 19th Street Office.

A basic question has been raised - why is the National Law Center taking this action?

Last summer we informed Professor Jean Cahn and OEO that the National Law Center would no longer accept direct Government funding for certain field work aspects of our Urban Law program. We made this decision because the Institute was evolving into a large public interest law firm over which the University had no control. With this evolution the educational component of the Institute became a very small part of its total effort. This can readily be seen by the fact that OEO provided over $600,000 last year for an effort which primarily involved about 30 students in field work at the 19th Street office. We concluded that such an enterprise could best be operated under the direct supervision of OEO with direct Government funding. Since that decision was made, we have continually stated our willingness to work with the Urban Law Institute in conducting educational activities in the field of urban law. We stand ready to accept a grant from OEO for fellowships in urban law, to send suitably qualified students to the Urban Law Institute for clinical experience, to foster continuing relationships between our faculty and the Urban Law Institute and to cooperate fully in the educational programs of the Institute. We are not willing, however, to take responsibilty for a public interest law firm. We have fully supported ULI for 3 years to enable it to incorporate and establish its independent field program at the 19th Street Office. Now we believe that parts of the field work, if successful, should be funded independently of the University.

We never contemplated that the University would operate a large law firm and engage directly in the practice of law. The University originally submitted a proposal for (1) graduate education (LL.M.) and (2) field training (to be conducted wholly by the Neighborhood Legal Services Program and funded directly by OEO to NLSP), to the Office of Economic Opportunity in March of 1968. The first paragraph under "Objectives" was as follows (in part):

> "The National Law Center of The George Washington University proposes to institute a novel and unique graduate studies program leading to a Master of Law (LL.M.) degree. The Program would be specifically designed to provide a new kind of academic training to a corps of law school graduates enrolled in the VISTA program, who would be living in poverty areas and working with community organizations and in neighborhood law offices. Other law school graduates, who are not VISTA volunteers, also will be eligible for matriculation within the program. In addition, courses within the program will be open to undergraduate law school students."

It is apparent from the above that, while pre-JD degree students might register for some of the graduate courses, the main intent was to establish a graduate academic program. It was to be totally academic in that no supervision of field projects by the Law Center was anticipated. Under this proposed program, which was the beginning of the Urban Law Institute, the Neighborhood Legal Services Program was to directly supervise the in-field work. That is, the proposal was clearly two-pronged at inception. The University would take the responsibility for the academic side through the courses, and another group or organization (NLSP) would assume the direct responsibility for the field work. It has always remained the Law Center's intention to keep the University removed from participation in the direct practice of law and to concentrate our efforts on the academic end where we felt that we had the talent, energies and basic knowledge.

To this end, and to be certain there were no misunderstandings concerning the Law Center's position in regard to involvement in the direct practice of law manifesting itself in the acceptance of client responsibility, the following directive was sent in the form of a memorandum by the Dean of the Law Center to Professor Jean Cahn on September 2, 1969, in her capacity as Director of the Urban Law Institute, stating:

> "Would you please follow these guidelines for the work of the Urban Law Institute until further notice from me. The Institute is not to be a plaintiff or moving party in any proceeding in any court or before any administrative agency or body, nor is it to be the attorney or counsel for any party in such a proceeding without prior written consent from me.

In May 1970, Professor Cahn submitted a proposal to Dean Kramer for the ULI to directly operate its own large law firm. Dean Kramer suggested that such a proposal be directly funded by OEO, since the ULI was now an independent corporation. Professor Cahn stated that the Institute needed another year of preparation before it could assume complete responsibility for administering a direct OEO grant. Dean Kramer then approved the proposal but notified Professor Cahn that this approval was given only on the basis that this was to be the final year of OEO funding of such field work through the Law Center. Furthermore, on May 20, 1970 after several discussions concerning the position of the Institute in regard to the direct practice of law, a memorandum was sent to Professor Cahn stating:

"The proposed budget and other funding proposals for the Urban Law Institute for 1970-71 have my approval subject, however, to the following conditions:

1) Under no circumstances is the Institute or the National Law Center or The George Washington University to engage in the practice of law. This means that as stated in my memorandum of September 2, 1969 that the Institute, the Law Center, or the University is not to be a plaintiff or moving party in any proceeding in any court or before any administrative agency or body, nor is it to be the attorney or counsel for any party in such a proceeding.

2) In addition, the Institute, the Law Center, or the University is not to operate a law firm of any kind.

(s) Robert Kramer
Dean
(s) J. C. Cahn"

(added in pen to the inserted following "...or before any administrative agency or body..." were the words, "other than informally before the administrative agency")

In June of 1970, the University was engaged in the negotiation of the present grant from OEO and refused to sign the contract for re-funding for 1970-71, in part because of a disagreement over the overhead percentage to be paid by OEO. The negotiations were completed only after the University agreed to make up the overhead deficit from its own funds. The University agreed to cover this deficit only because the University Budget Director was informed by the Dean of the Law Center that this would be the last year of funding through the University. Dean Kramer informed him and Professor Cahn at that time that we would go ahead for this final year in order to allow the Institute to make preparations for direct funding for the year 1971-72. The University then signed the agreement and, based upon this condition, (i.e. the last year of OEO funding through the University), put thousands of dollars into the project for the year 1970-71, and the Law Center gave almost maximum autonomy to the Urban Law Institute by reducing supervision to an absolute minimum, because of the decision reached in June 1970 and reflected in a memorandum sent to Professor Cahn, dated July 9, 1970, stating:

"In accordance with our previous conversations, would you please take whatever steps are necessary so that after June 30, 1971 the Urban Law Institute will no longer receive any funds from or through the George Washington University. Instead, the Institute should receive all its funds directly from OEO or other sources.

I realize that this requires much planning, but I am confident that with a full year to accomplish this, it can be done most advantageously.

(s) Robert Kramer
Dean"

This was followed by a memorandum dated August 10, 1970 which was hand-carried to Mr. Lenzner, the then Director of Legal Services of OEO, by Associate Dean Potts. It reads as follows:

"Gentlemen:

The George Washington University has decided that after its present contract with OEO expires on June 30, 1971, the University will no longer fund the activities of the Urban Law Institute. This means that after that date the Urban Law Institute will no longer receive any funds from or through the University, and, in the case of OEO, any OEO funds for the Institute should be transmitted directly from OEO to the Institute (or in any event such funds should not be given by OEO to the University for transmittal to the Institute).

Yours truly,
(s) Robert Kramer
Dean"

On September 11, 1970, the Law Center faculty was informed of this decision and discussed it briefly (as had the Faculty Advisory Committee), and the minutes of that meeting (setting forth this decision) were posted on the bulletin board for the student body to read, as is customary.

In view of the above sequence of events, several questions are pertinent.

Why has this issue of the decision made in June of 1970 been raised with the news media et al at this time?

Is it true that OEO will not fund the field program directly for the next fiscal year? If so, why? We know of no valid reasons for a refusal (direct funding by OEO will eliminate the University overhead expense and so save government money).

Has a proposal ever been submitted to OEO by ULI for direct funding of the law office on 19th Street for 1971-72? If not, why not?

If ULI seriously wanted to prosecute the Anacostia suit, why hadn't it assured itself of the funding necessary to carry it through?

Who has authority to speak for OEO in these Matters?

The signer of the last letter we received from OEO has already left the agency. What effect, if any, does the current special GAO audit, instituted since this last letter to us from OEO, have upon the position of OEO in direct funding by it of the ULI?

The field program of the Urban Law Institute now, in effect, amounts to the actual operation of a large law office engaging directly in the practice of law. In short, it is a public-interest law firm. This is a far cry from the anticipated field work under the first two years of grants providing for field supervision and training of VISTA lawyers by the Neighborhood Legal Services Program Director, whereby NLSP was obligated to furnish:

"(a) lawyers to supervise the work of these VISTA lawyers,
(b) adequate work assignments for all VISTA lawyers,
(c) secretarial and administrative support of these VISTA lawyers, and
(d) adequate office space to enable these VISTA lawyers to perform their work."

In addition, NLSP was to "... furnish monthly reports on all VISTA lawyers...", and to "...provide all necessary information to enable GWU to furnish progress reports on this program to the Office of Economic Opportunity every four months."

We do not feel that the present field program which the Director of the Urban Law Institute insists upon is an effective and efficient way to utilize the limited human talents, energies and desperately thin financial resources of this University. We do not believe that we can provide adequate supervision for a program of this magnitude. Many want to compare our position to the University financing of a hospital and clinic. One need only look at the critical fund shortages suffered by our medical school and hospital to realize the utter practical futility of the University financing a law firm, to say nothing of the enormous staffs required. Moreover, a far more feasible approach would seem to be one followed by many other hospitals -- that is, the hospital is responsible for its own funding, and the University supplies the teaching staff and academic program.

We have looked upon this Law Center's function as giving a start to certain innovative and imaginative legal education programs whenever possible and practical. Then, after giving them a chance to gain momentum, we hope and expect that they will go on to further fruition and independent development to take their proper place in the community without the restrictions which an educational institution must necessarily impose.

Now that the Urban Law Institute is individually incorporated, and now that it has had the opportunity for three years under the sponsorship of this University to develop its field program, is it not logical and feasible for this work to be directly financed by OEO? Should this be done, the University will cooperate fully in working out details for a continued relationship to the independently funded Urban Law Institute in order to provide an attractive and worthwhile academic program to be available for those doing field work for the Institute. We so notified OEO again only a few weeks ago.

Is this not the most effective way for this University to utilize its very limited resources by training in large numbers future lawyers, at both the pre and post JD levels, to work in communities all over the nation and to prepare them to directly assist in the search for sound solutions for their most difficult problems? Does this not allow us to promote many different programs over a brief time span, again with limited resources?

We believe it is the correct approach, and therein lies the basis for our decision of some nine months ago.

TEACHING EXPERIMENT IN ANTHROPOLOGY EXPANDS---A new, small museum of anthropology, used originally as an experimental exhibiting area by students in an anthropology seminar in museum techniques, will be open to the public Wednesday, March 10, in Building X, 2112 G Street, N.W. The students, under the direction of Professor Robert L. Humphrey, have constructed, sculptured and painted exhibits showing how the Paleoindian lived. The Paleoindian was one of the first big game hunters to occupy North America about 12,000 years ago. Exhibits include artifacts, living floors showing soil and fauna, and a diorama of a Paleoindian campsite.

GW STUDENTS PROTEST ABC NEWS COVERAGE---The following statement was initiated and prepared by GW students and delivered to the ABC radio network on Thursday. ABC radio news coverage, broadcast all day Wednesday, linked two GW students with the bombing of the Capitol. The statement was signed by Michael Goergen, member of the Student Court; D.W. Downes, chairman of the Marvin Center Operations Board; Robert A. Rosenfeld, Rhodes Scholar; Edward Grebow, chairman of Young Americans for Freedom; Jon Higman, editor of the University Hatchet; Carol Van Etten, coordinator of the Student Mobilization Committee; David Berz, chairman of the Student Court; Roy Chang, representative for Upper Columbian College; and Shelley Green, former secretary of student government.

We, representatives of the student body at George Washington University, would like to make it plain that we:

---condemn the senseless bombing of the Capitol building as the act of an irrational mind.

---abhor violence as a means of accomplishing any political goals.

---deplore the lack of integrity shown by ABC in its coverage of the news story. The report linking GW students to the bombing is unsubstantiated; we feel that the factual basis for this report is nebulous and would be difficult, if not impossible, to prove.

---call for ABC news to retract the statement that links GW students to this action until some substantial proof can be advanced.

YUAN ON TV---Dr. S. W. Yuan, Professor of Engineering and Applied Science, will be interviewed tonight on WRC-TV channel 4 news by correspondent John Cochran. Dr. Yuan will discuss his recent invention which can eliminate the danger of air turbulence created in the wake of jumbo jets such as the 747 and C5-A.

DIXON RECEIVES SENIOR FELLOWSHIP---Professor Robert G. Dixon of the National Law Center has just received a senior fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities for the academic year 1971-72. He is one of 50 in the United States selected for the honor.

He was awarded the senior fellowship for his proposed project, "The Equality Concept in Social Theory, Political Practice and Constitutional Norms." Professor Dixon, who will be on sabbatical from GW, will spend one month in England and complete his study in Washington. The fellowship allows up to $15,000 for a 12-month period.

ANTI-POLLUTION PROJECT UNDERWAY---Eliminating pollution caused by the automobile is a pet project this spring for undergraduate students in engineering. GW's School of Engineering and Applied Science has been selected by the Ford Motor Company as one of the 20 engineering schools in the country to participate in its Mustang Engineering Project. The Mustang Project has been created to afford engineering faculty and students an opportunity to increase the effectiveness of learning experiences by having students work on "real life" problems as part of their engineering studies. A prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best project.

SESQUI STICKERS AVAILABLE---Sesquicentennial stickers are available in packages of 250 for $1.65 at the Marvin Center Bookstore. The stickers may be used on all types of mail.

THE AMERICAN DREAM---The last of a series of four informal dialogues between speakers and students on the American Dream will be held at 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 17, in the Graduate Lounge, 4th Floor, Marvin Center. Dr. James Hester, President of New York University, will be the speaker. The seminar is open to the public. These symposia have been held as part of the senior proseminar in American Studies.

STATEMENT ON PROGRAM BOARD BUDGET---The director of the Budget and the Vice President for Student Affairs released the following statement in regard to the story and editorial in the Hatchet of March 8th concerning the Program Board Budget for 1971-72:

1. The decision that the Marvin Center should be a self-supporting auxiliary enterprise was made by the University before construction of the building began, not in November, 1970.

2. This decision meant that departmental users of the Center, such as the bookstore, parking garage, faculty club, and academic departments, should be charged their pro-rata share of the Center's operating and debt service costs. For 1971-72 these charges were all made and accurately reflected in the budget which was approved.

3. It was never intended that Program Board costs ($45,000 for 1971-72) should be part of the cost of operating the Center as an auxiliary enterprise. They were deleted from the Center Budget for transfer to the Student Activities section of the budget. A simple mistake was made in effecting this transfer.

4. The Program Board will have a budget of $45,000 for 1971-72. The Student Affairs Office and the Budget Office are reviewing the various ways by which this budget can be established. This work has not yet been completed. It need not be completed until June 30, 1971.

UNDERGRADUATE APPLICATIONS DOWN -- As of the Ides of March, applications for admission to GW as freshmen are down 19 per cent as compared with the same date a year ago, and undergraduate transfer applications are down 10 per cent. On the basis of present projections, the undergraduate enrollment in the Fall of 1971 will be 350 less than for the Fall of 1970.

Consequently, income from tuition and related resources is expected to be about $900,000 less than originally anticipated for 1971-72. With the apparent need to reduce the budget by this amount, programs and services are in the process of being reviewed by deans, department chairmen, and administrative officers.

NEW YORK ATTORNEY ELECTED TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES -- Jacob Burns, a New York attorney specializing in corporate law, was elected last week to the University Board of Trustees.

Mr. Burns was graduated from GW's Law School "with distinction" in 1924 and was awarded an LL.D. degree in 1970. The University's Law Library is named after him.

Until recently, Mr. Burns was Chairman of the Board of Directors of U.S.V. Pharaceutical Corporation and is now a consultant for that firm. He is a director of Revlon, Inc.

He was appointed by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York to the Committee on Character and Fitness, which passes upon the admission of attorneys to the bar. He is also a member of the Committee on Grievances of the New York State Bar Association.

He has been active for many years in the affairs of the New York County Lawyers' Association, including membership on its Board of Directors. For several years he was chairman of the joint Co-ordinating Committee on Discipline of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, New York City Lawyers' Association, and the Bronx County Bar Association.

ATTEMPTS TO IMPROVE POLLUTION CONTROL -- There are two major facets to pollution at GW -- solid waste disposal from University buildings and operations, and air pollution from heating and the incineration of solid wastes. The University has moved to control air pollution by converting its heating operations to utilize low sulphur fuels and by installing air scrubbing equipment on its large incinerator at the Hospital.

In the new buildings, the University is using natural gas as an energy source, but because the source of natural gas supply is limited, the University is required to maintain a fuel oil capability as an alternate energy source. The fuel oil is a low-sulphur variety and within the regulations of the District of Columbia.

In the new Medical School, GW is installing an automated environmental system which utilizes a small computer for control. One of the control functions will be to improve firing and fuel burning. This same automated control system will be connected to all of the University's major heating systems; i.e., Classroom Building C, and Thurston and Mitchell Halls. When this new equipment is in use, the University will be able to exercise maximum control over air pollution. Regardless, the University will continue to analyze its heating operations in order to minimize pollution effects.

Solid Waste Disposal is a separate and distinct problem. (Waste is generated from feeding activities, from the educational and research facilities, and from the Hospital.) On the recommendation of Roy F. Weston, Inc., nationally known environmental engineers who evaluated the waste disposal problem within the Medical Center, the University will install new compaction and incineration equipment in the Hospital within the next year. This equipment will insure that the University will be able to meet the new standards of air quality proposed by the District of Columbia, and still be able to control pathological waste. In the interim, the hospital staff and the Physical Plant Administrator have developed a system to handle hospital supply waste separately and eliminate the overload on the existing hospital incinerator.

A study also has been completed on the handling of solid waste from the balance of the campus, and the Physical Plant Administrator has recommended that compaction units be provided at major solid waste generating buildings. This change will be made as soon as budgeting can be arranged.

Solid waste management is important, not only from the standpoint of environment, but also because it is a costly process. The University spends between $50 and $100 each day picking up litter from the campus. This is a real waste of resources. You can change this situation by placing all waste material in containers. Your cooperation will help to provide a better environment for everyone in the campus community.

URBAN LAW INSTITUTE STATEMENT -- Robert Kramer, Dean of the National Law Center of George Washington University issued the following statement last week:

> Conflicting interpretations have been given to the possibility of the Urban Law Institute being directly funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity. The facts are as follows:
> 1. Statements made by OEO in March, 1971, including Director Frank Carlucci's statement of March 12, do not preclude the possibility that OEO will directly fund the field work of the Urban Law Institute. The OEO has merely said that it "has no plans" to do so.

2. The OEO stated that it has received no application from the Urban Law Institute for re-funding.

3. Unless and until the Urban Law Institute makes application to the OEO, the question of whether or not OEO will fund it cannot be answered.

In view of the above, The National Law Center of The George Washington University repeats that The National Law Center has continually been, and remains, willing to enter into negotiations at any time on the basis of The National Law Center continuing and sponsoring the academic program provided that the field operations of the ULI at its 19th Street office are funded directly by OEO. We will cooperate fully in working out details for our relationship to the independently funded Institute in order to provide and sponsor an attractive and worthwhile academic program for those doing field work for the Institute.

ELEVEN GIVEN EMERITUS STATUS -- The University Board of Trustees approved emeritus status in its meeting last week to the following faculty members:

Thomas McPherson Brown, Professor Emeritus of Medicine; Katherine Elizabeth Burtner, Professor Emeritus of Physical Education; Frank Duncan Costenbader, Professor Emeritus of Clinical Ophthalmology; Robert Emmit Cronin, Professor Emeritus of Engineering and Applied Science; William Rankin Duryee, Professor Emeritus of Pathology; James Quincy Grant Jr., Professor Emeritus of Clinical Dermatology; Wolfram Karl Legner, Professor Emeritus of German; Benjamin Rones, Professor Emeritus of Clinical Ophthalmology; Blake Smith Root, Professor Emeritus of Education; Donald Harrison Stubbs, Professor Emeritus of Clinical Anesthesiology; and Richard Wallace Wilkinson, Professor Emeritus of Clinical Ophthalmology.

DEPARTMENT NAME CHANGED -- The University Board of Trustees has approved a name change for the Department of Chinese Language and Literature to the Department of East Asian Languages and Literature.

MEDICAL CENTER MAKES ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES -- P. Whitney Spaulding has been appointed administrator of the University Hospital, effective in May, to take the place of Victor F. Ludewig, who has been promoted to the newly created post of administrator of the University Clinical Center. Mr. Ludewig's new position has responsibility over the hospital, clinic, and related activities.

Mr. Spaulding is currently associate executive director of the Hartford Hospital in Hartford, Conn.

BOWIE THANKS DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH CARE ADMINISTRATION -- The City of Bowie has passed a resolution of gratitude to five graduate students in health care administration and three faculty members for doing "a detailed study establishing the need for a hospital complex to be erected in the Bowie area."

The students commended are Kenneth F. Brooks, Joel T. Levine, James McCaslin, Behrooz Mohit, and Sister Susan Radzke. The faculty members commended are Dr. Leon Gintzig, department chairman, Dr. Phillip N. Reeves, and Mr. L. William Katz.

URBAN AFFAIRS SHOW ON TV -- Professor Dorn McGrath, Mr. Robert Cannady, Mr. Rod French, and Mr. Ernest Holz will appear on television to discuss some of the ways that the resources of GWU are being applied to understand and work with the problems of an urban society. The program will be telecast on Sunday, March 28, at 3:30 p.m. on WRC-TV, channel 4 and be repeated at 1 a.m. that morning.

STUDENTS RAISE $15,500 -- Students working in the "George Calling" telethon last week raised more than $15,500 in pledges, a higher than anticipated figure. The telethon continues this week with alumni and staff manning the phones.

NOTICE ON NEW PARKING RATES

New parking rates will go into effect on July 1, 1971, on the recommendation of the University Parking Committee, made up of student, faculty, and staff representatives. The new rates are necessary in order to live within the University's Parking Policy that the University "charge a fee for parking to cover its costs of operation and an interest return on its investment" in the parking lots. The Parking Policy was recommended last year by the Parking Committee and approved by President Elliott.

The new parking rates are:

A. University & Medical Center Staffs - Open Lots - $15 per month
Bldg. "C" Garage - $18 per month

B. Students - Open Lots - Daily - $0.75 per parking period
Open Lots - Overtime - $0.75 " "
Ctr Garage - Daily - $1.00 " "
Ctr Garage - Overtime - $0.75" "

C. Guests, Visitors & Alumni - Ctr Garage - $0.60 per hour
$2.50 Max. up to 8 hrs.
$0.10 per hr. add'l over 8 hrs.
$1.25 after 5:00 P.M.

- Hospital Lot - $0.60 per hour
$0.30 each add'l ½ hr.
$2.75 max.

D. Part-Time Faculty and Graduate Teaching Fellows - $36.00 per semester
$ 1.50 daily day rate
$ 1.00 daily evening rate (after 5 P.M.)

Further fee hikes are anticipated in 1972-73 to assist with the financing of a new parking garage. As a matter of information, commercial parking rates in the University area range from $25 to $42.50 per month, depending on whether the space is on an open lot or in a garage. Due to increasing costs, there is no reason to expect these commercial parking rates to remain at these levels. The University parking fees are, and will continue to be, below the going commercial rates in the area.

The Parking Committee also recommended the abolishment of overnight parking privileges for resident students "in light of the pending critical shortage of space" and the need to provide all available parking spaces to commuter students for whom transportation is necessary. This policy will become effective Sept. 1, 1971, and will continue in effect "until such time as there is sufficient space available to warrant reconsideration."

Members of the Parking Committee are: J. C. Einbinder (Chairman), Business Manager; Curtis T. Bacon, Director of Personnel Services; Victor F. Ludewig, Hospital Administrator; Dr. C. R. Naeser, Chemistry Department Chairman; David G. Speck, Assistant to the Vice President for Student Affairs; Dr. Carl H. Walther, Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs; Douglas Kaplan, student; Charles McClenon, student; Richard Rosenblum, student; Charles E. Diehl (ex officio), Assistant Vice President and Assistant Treasurer; Stephen B. Lee (ex officio); Director of Auxiliary Enterprises; and Joseph Mello (ex officio), Director of Parking.

FORD FOUNDATION GRANTS--- The Ford Foundation last week awarded grants of $120,000 to the National Manpower Policy Task Force and $135,878 to GW for continued research at the University's Center for Manpower Policy Studies on manpower and poverty. The foundation said that the "grants will support the work of Drs. Sar A. Levitan and Garth Magnum who are among the nation's foremost analysts of public efforts to meet the needs of the disadvantaged and unemployed." The grant will enable the researchers to complete a textbook on manpower development, publish monographs on state and local manpower planning, and analyze work incentives for welfare recipients, unemployment among black youth, and the first decade of Federal aid to depressed areas. Drs. Levitan and Magnum also conduct seminars on poverty and manpower policy for scholars, members of Congress and their staffs and executives from the White House and Federal agencies.

STATEMENT FROM PRESIDENT ELLIOTT--- The following statement from President Lloyd H. Elliott was read by Provost Harold F. Bright at the meeting of the Faculty Senate last Friday, April 16:

As in the past, the likelihood that large numbers of people will congregate in Washington to participate in various anti-war activities this spring has prompted some members of the University community to ask what policies will be followed with respect to such questions as guests in residence halls, use of University Center facilities and continuation of the academic program.

Past experience has shown that with few exceptions members of the University community have conducted themselves in a serious and responsible manner and in times of difficulty have given exceptional service to the University. There is every reason to believe that this will continue to be true. Consequently, the University will proceed with its regular operations on the basis of previously announced policies.

For those who may wish to review existing policies more thoroughly, the following will be available on request at the information desk in the Center: Statement of Student Rights and Responsibilities; University Center Building Use Policies; Student Handbook; Statements of the President with respect to dissent and disruption, September 22, 1969 and September 29, 1969.

Other offices of the University may issue statements with regard to areas of activity that fall within their responsibilities, and, within the limits of time, University offices will make every effort to answer pertinent additional questions.

Two main points should be kept before us. First, the University is a forum for all points of view -- the orthodox and the innovative, the conservative and the radical, the theoretical and the pragmatic. Second, the rights of all to teach and to learn must be protected. Speaking to the Faculty Assembly in September 1970 I said, "George Washington will continue to function as a University, a place of discussion and learning. It will not become a political instrument. Neither its facilities nor its aegis will be made available to the few at the expense of the best interests of the University."

This remains our policy.

25 UNDERGRADUATE DEPARTMENTS UNDER STUDY--- With the money pinch in private higher education, George Washington University has embarked on a project to improve undergraduate programs while cutting costs.

GW will begin in September a three-year action study aimed at getting 25 undergraduate departments in liberal arts and sciences to "work together as a unit in the realistic assessment of their needs and in the frugal use of their resources, free of departmental rivalry." Efforts will be made to curb "academic overlapping" in basic science, humanities, and social sciences courses taken by most undergraduate students.

The study, underwritten by a $25,000 grant from the Esso Education Foundation, includes the development of administrative structures "to assure positive results."

At the end of two years, the University will evaluate what course consolidations, enrichments, and concentrations have taken place and what evidence there is for increased efficiency in the use of budgetary resources.

The project is an outgrowth of an in-depth, institution-wide budget study at George Washington, a study which university officials believe is "generating more knowledge as to real educational costs and real departmental performance than exists at perhaps any other institution in the country."

The undergraduate study is centered in GW's Columbian College of Arts and Sciences. Its dean, Calvin D. Linton, said the first step in putting the research into action will be the appointment of a special committee of faculty members from three basic divisions -- humanities, sciences, and social sciences.

These faculty members, who will be given reduced teaching loads, will do most of the research. Among the research objectives will be to bring together representatives of departments which have similar educational objectives, approaches, and expenses to examine ways of integrating programs and eliminating overlapping.

"I would hope in these days of the tight educational dollar that we can have creative and fresh thinking on the basic forms of education," Dean Linton said, "so that the money can be used for the best education for the most people."

The study will officially end in June, 1973.

The grant to GW from Esso was one of four made to universities for the improvements of undergraduate education. Other recipients are Harvard, Carnegie-Mellon, and U.I.T.

GW STILL FIRST--- The March issue of Nation's Business notes that George Washington University is "the No. 1 alma mater" for federal officials. Summarizing a recent article in California Management Review, Nation's Business also notes that Yale produces more top business executives than any other school and that the University of Chicago leads all others as the campus home of future college presidents.

NEW "COMMUNITY INVOLVEMENT" REPORT ISSUED--- The 1971 edition of "Examples of Community Involvement of The George Washington University" has been prepared by, and is available from, the Office of Public Relations, 811 Henry Building.

STUDENTS WIN $1,000 PRIZE FOR GBA--- A team of GBA students under the supervision of Salvatore F. Divita, Associate Professor of Business Administration, won a regional prize of $1,000 for producing the best college marketing study on the Ford Pinto in this part of the country. GW was one of 156 universities participating in the automobile company's "Pinto Project for the Academic Community," and one of 16 regional winners.

FULBRIGHT FELLOW--- Donald Stone MacDonald, a Ph.D. candidate in political science at GW, has received a Fulbright-Hays Doctoral Dissertation Fellowship to complete studies in Korea for his dissertation on "The International Dimension in Korean National Development, 1945-1955." Mr. MacDonald received his B.S. degree in Business Administration from M.I.T. in 1938 and a Master's degree in International Relations from Harvard in 1960.

BENEFIT FOR NEW HORIZONS SCHOLARSHIP FUND--- The Department of Continuing Education for Woman, College of General Studies, will hold a tea and open house benefit for its New Horizons Scholarship Fund from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sunday, April 25. Faculty and staff are invited. The benefit will be given at the historic home of New Horizon's class member Mrs. George Walker of 711 Prince Street in Alexandria. The house, restored by Mrs. Walker and her husband, the late Major General George Walker, was built prior to 1800 and enlarged in 1810. Guests are asked to donate to the scholarship fund, which assists women who want to resume part-time academic study.

COMING EVENTS--- The GWU Dance Company will present a dance concert at 8:30 p.m. Thursday and Friday, April 22 and 23, and a matinee for high school students at 12 p.m. Friday, April 23, at Lisner Auditorium. Choreography will include works by faculty and graduate students. Tickets for $1 are available at the Marvin Center Information Booth.

MARTHA'S MARATHON ON THURSDAY--- Martha's Marathon of birthday bargains, the annual student scholarship fund-raiser will take place at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday, April 22, in the ballroom of the Marvin Center. Entertainment, admission: 50¢.

THE BANZHAF SAGA, PART II--- When we left our readers in the last issue, we were listing some recent articles about Prof. John Banzhaf III and his fabled Bandits which appeared in such diverse publications as Saga, For Men Only, and Reader's Digest. Our purpose in running the item was to show the diversity of the favorable national coverage given the university as a result of the work of the law professor and his students. Some of our readers, however, misconstrued the item as casting improper aspersions on the professor. No so. Matter of fact, we used the material sent to us from his office almost word-for-word. PARKING CHANGES--- When the University begins construction of the parking garage and the University Library this summer, parking space will be lost during a part of this construction period. The University, however, has taken steps to replace this loss through the rental of parking space in the vicinity of the University, Hospital, and Clinic for the period needed.

In addition to our own construction plans, WMATA (Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority) expects to begin construction of the first and second phase of the subway system along the I Street corridor this summer. This construction project will result in the loss of additional parking space presently assigned to the University Hospital and Clinic. The University has gone on record that it expects WMATA to provide us with equivalent replacement parking facilities (or provide us with the ability to obtain suitable replacement.) WMATA recognizes its responsibility to do so. The University has entered into negotiations with a commercial operator for the rental of parking space convenient to the Hospital and Clinic to replace the spaces to be taken by WMATA.

The University, by taking these actions, anticipates that there will be no overall reduction in parking available for its students, faculty and staff during this period of major construction.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE GETS FEDERAL GRANT--- The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, through its Bureau of Health Manpower Education of the National Institutes of Health, has awarded a grant of $1,900,000 to the GW Medical Center "for the purpose of alleviating financial distress resulting from the anticipated operating deficit of the school" for the fiscal year 1970-71. The grant was made possible by favorable Congressional action last year.

SEAS GETS NASA GRANT--- The School of Engineering and Applied Sciences has received a grant of $200,000 from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to initiate a joint research program in aeronautics at the NASA-Langley Research Center in Hampton, Va.

The two-year program will concentrate on low-speed aeronautics, including V/STOL (vertical/short take off and landing) craft. Graduate students majoring in flight science will take part in the study.

WORK-STUDY PROGRAM IN SPANISH--- A summer work-study program will be offered in conjunction with the Spanish Education Development Center for Spanish-speaking GW students to work with children in Washington's Spanish-American community in the fields of language and culture. The two-term program (June 14-August 26) is being headed by Alfredo Neira.

FORD FOUNDATION GRANTS $410,000--- The Ford Foundation has announced a $410,000 grant to help fund the previously announced Institute for Educational Leadership at GW under the direction of Dr. Norman Drachler.

The institute will sponsor seminars, internships, travel, fellows-in-residence, and on-the-job training programs in an effort to improve educational leadership at various levels throughout the nation.

It will also administer two current GW-related programs, the Educational Staff Seminar and the Washington Internships in Education. A new project, the Associates Program, will enable selected university faculty members around the country to serve as technical consultants to private and public educational bodies.

Francis Keppel, chairman of the board of General Learning Corporation, will serve as chairman of the new advisory council to the institute. Other members of the council, whose membership will be enlarged, are President Elliott; Elizabeth Koontz, director of the Women's Bureau in the U.S. Department of Labor; Cleveland Dennard, president of the Washington Technical Institute, and Frank Dickey, executive director of the National Commission on Accrediting.

BROWNOUT PROCEDURES LISTED--- The East Coast will probably experience another summer of brownouts, or electrical power shortages, at which time PEPCO will alert the University. The physical plant department then will cut off air conditioning in unused spaces, first notifying affected departments.

In addition, cutbacks in other parts of the University will result in a slightly higher temperature and humidity. As a final step, air conditioning may be cut off completely in some buildings. Before this is done, occupants will be notified by phone.

To help reduce electrical consumption during critical periods, the physical plant department suggests:

. Turn off lights in halls and unused rooms.

. If possible, turn off part of the lights in any room. This is particularly helpful as direct consumption is reduced and as the lighting itself induces a significant heat load requiring more cooling.

. Turn off window air conditioners in unoccupied rooms.

. Close drapes and blinds to reduce load induced by the sun (or even light) through the windows.

CARNEGIE REPORT DISCUSSION ON TV--- Dean Calvin Linton of Columbian College and Associate Dean Alvin Jensen of CGS will participate in a televised discussion of the Carnegie Commission on the Future of Higher Education at 3:30 p.m. Sunday on WRC-TV, Ch. 4. The program, part of the "Topic" series, will also include Eric Wentworth of the Washington Post and Jonathan Spivak of the Wall Street Journal. The show was produced by the Office of Public Relations.

"CHERRY TREE" ON SALE--- The 1971 Cherry Tree, edited by Peter Mikelbank with photography by David Vita, is now on sale in the textbook department of the University Bookstore. The annual is a break with tradition in that it comes in a two-volume, soft-bound set and is devoted primarily to photographic essay.

Jerry Lake, director of photography at Corcoran School of Art, said the Cherry Tree "has for the first time in the United States, so far as I know, separated photography as an emotional quality from straight documentary photography. It is an immense step ahead for yearbooks and for photography as an art form."

MATHEMATICS HONORARY HAS RECEPTION--- Pi Mu Epsilon mathematics honorary will hold an initiation and reception, open to the public, from 5:30 to 7 p.m. today in Lounge A of the GSU Club in the Marvin Center. President Elliott will be the guest of honor. Reservations may be made by calling Dr. Henney at 6235 or 6760.

UNIVERSITY SIGNS CONTRACT FOR PARKING GARAGE--- GW has signed a contract in excess of $3.6 million with George Hyman Construction Company for a new 10-story parking structure. Construction will get underway early in June and is expected to be completed by September of 1972. The parking structure, to be located on the northwest corner of 22nd and H Streets, N.W., will provide 1,020 parking spaces--essentially replacing the spaces lost when the University began constructing four new buildings on former parking lots. The garage exterior will be constructed of precast concrete and masonry units. It will be entirely self-parking, with three below-grade levels, seven above-grade stories, and roof parking. Entrances and exits will be located on H, Eye and 22nd Streets. Financing for the garage is by private loan, which will be amortized through University parking fees.

EMERGENCY PAVILION NAMED FOR TRUSTEE--- GW has received a major gift from Trustee Watson W. Wise of Tyler, Tex., for the naming of the Watson Wise Emergency Pavilion of the George Washington University Hospital. Dedication ceremonies will be held this fall. Formally opened in April, 1970, the Emergency Pavilion has served more than 36,000 patients. Resources for emergency care within the unit include cardiac monitoring equipment, a seven-bed observation section, a quiet room for psychiatric emergencies, x-ray equipment, and a laboratory. Mr. Wise, an industrialist, was U.S. Delegate to the 13th General Assembly of the United Nations. He is a director of the Lone Star Steel Company, the Arkansas Best Corporation, and the Southwest Medical Foundation.

N.L.R.B. ANNOUNCES DECISION ON BOOKSTORE CASE--- The National labor Relations Board has dismissed a petition from Retail Store Employees Union Local 400. The petition would have created a separate bargaining unit for employees of the University Bookstore.

In rejecting the petition, the N.L.R.B. said:

"... Although the bookstore possesses some autonomy in its day-to-day operations and engages in some minor commercial activities, the record makes it clear that the bookstore is both by its location and by its function a closely integrated segment of the University's operation as an institution of higher learning. We therefore find that the employees of the bookstore do not have a community of interest sufficiently separate and distinct from other nonacademic employees to justify the creation of a separate unit for them. Accordingly we shall dismiss the petition."

Retail Store Employees Union Local 400 filed the petition last Sept. 4. The Union, which claimed to represent certain employees of the Bookstore, had requested that the following group be recognized as a bargaining unit: all regular full-time and all regular part-time employees of the Bookstore, except guards, supervisors, and casual employees. The petition made a hearing necessary, and briefs were filed by both the University's attorney and the Union's attorney. Following the hearing, the case was transferred to the N.L.R.B. for decision.

DOCTORAL STUDENT NAMED WHITE HOUSE FELLOW--- Henry G. Cisneros has been named one of 16 White House Fellows for 1971-72. He is the youngest of the group. The Fellows were selected from 1,600 applicants nationwide. A doctoral student in public administration at GW, he is also assistant to the executive vice president of the National League of Cities. Mr. Cisneros will be assigned with other Fellows to a White House post or as a special assistant to a Cabinet officer.

DEPARTMENT OF FORENSIC SCIENCE CREATED--- To improve the capabilities of forensic scientists, George Washington University is expanding a graduate-level, inter-disciplinary program into a full-fledged Department of Forensic Science. The Department is the first of its kind in a university in the United States.

Forensic science is the discipline that makes use of scientific principles, techniques, and instrumentation in the examination of physical evidence and in the presentation of the results of that examination in courts of law or in other forums of public debate.

The GW program, geared primarily for forensic scientists presently working in and with crime laboratories, seeks to improve their scientific and legal expertise, as well as their effectiveness as witnesses in testifying in courts of law or public hearings. Emphasis in the program is in law and science.

Dr. Theodore P. Perros, professor of chemistry, has been appointed chairman of the new graduate department in GW's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. Candidates for admission must have a bachelor's degree in the biological or physical sciences, engineering, mathematics, or the equivalent.

GW's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences began offering a Master's degree in Forensic Science in 1968, with the program directed by a committee chaired by Dr. Perros and consisting of faculty members from various GW departments and schools. The first graduating class of 41 students received their degrees last month (June, 1971).

Dr. Perros said that "the success of the program and the increasing interest in it necessitated the formal establishment of a Department of Forensic Science." The Department, he said, will "continue to develop its present offerings and will in successive stages expand its activities so as to become eventually a national center for research and scholarship in forensic science."

Dr. Perros and Professor Alton H. Desmond, chairman of the biology department, will serve as senior members of the new department's faculty. Earl J. Ross has been appointed Administrative Officer for Forensic Science. Mr. Ross also will continue in his present position as Assistant to the Dean for Special Programs in GW's College of General Studies.

TEXTBOOK DISCOUNT CONTINUED--- Five per cent discounts on textbooks will be continued at the University Bookstore through the 1971-72 academic year. This was recommended by the Bookstore Committee and approved by President Elliott.

However, because of the continuing deficit in the overall operation of the Marvin Center, the Bookstore policy will be reviewed with the Center's Governing Board during the coming year, as will other items related to eliminating the deficit.

PRESIDENT APPROVED OFFICE OF PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT--- A proposal to establish an "Office of Program Development" has been approved by President Elliott. The office, which will report to the Provost, is expected to be in operation shortly. It will coordinate the various experimental, curricular activities that extend beyond the confines of a single school or college. An ad hoc committee, appointed by the president and made up primarily of faculty members, recommended the proposal.

DIRECTORY INFORMATION SOUGHT--- The Student Activities Office is undertaking to print a complete student directory for the 1971-72 year. It will include all currently enrolled students, current addresses, and telephone numbers, as well as general information about the University. For any questions about this publication, please call the Student Activities Office at 676-6555.

The file lists agencies, addresses, contacts, job descriptions and special features. Those who have material to add to the file or would like to use it should contact Stephen Phillips, 6898, or the GW-Washington Project, 7565.

DIRECTOR CHOSEN FOR OFFICE OF PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT--- Professor Clarence Mondale has been appointed director of the Office of Program Development. As director, he will work with a joint faculty-administrative steering committee which will coordinate the various experimental curricular activities that extend beyond the reach of a single school or college. The committee will report to the Provost.

PERSONNEL CHANGES MADE IN STUDENT AFFAIRS OFFICE--- David G. Speck, formerly Assistant to the Vice President for Student Affairs, has been appointed Director of Student Activities. Kenneth E. Bumgarner, previously an instructor in Health and P.E. at GW, has become Assistant to the Vice President for Student Affairs and Secretary to the GW Non-Academic Disciplinary System. Mrs. Barbara A. Lembcke, formerly a counselor to students at the University of Florida, has assumed the position of Assistant Dean of Students; and Miss Janet C. Hardy, previously a teacher at Yorktown High School in Arlington, is now Program Coordinator for the Student Activities Office.

FELLOWSHIP INFORMATION CENTER REPORTS ACTIVITIES--- The Fellowship Information Center, located in Building Q, has completed its first year of full-time operation, a year in which a Rhodes scholarship and three Fulbrights were awarded to GW people. During the year, more than 500 students utilized the services of the Center, obtaining funds in excess of $134,000. (Mrs.) Marietta Barbier has become director of the Center, succeeding Darlene Roth.

SUMMER REPORT ON GRANTS RECEIVED--- Grants reported this summer include: $105,908 to the GW-Washington Project (Prof. Clarence Mondale) for GW-Chase Neighborhood Development Program from the Consortium of Universities; $43,659 to the Program of Policy Studies for a "Survey and Assessment of Current Government Noise Regulations" from the Environmental Protection Agency; $61,560 to the School of Medicine (Dr. Samuel M. HUMANITIES PROGRAM AWARDED MAJOR GRANT--- The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded a grant of $432,730 to GW for a four-year Humanities Development Program designed to make the University directly responsive to what faculty, students and the surrounding community need and value.

The Endowment's outright grant was combined with a "gifts-and-matching offer" of an additional $250,000, bringing to $682,730 the total amount which the University might receive over the next four years. Under its gifts-and-matching offer, the Endowment will match up to $125,000 in donations or pledges made to it on behalf of George Washington.

The grant is part of the Endowment's new program of Educational Development Grants begun in the past year to assist selected institutions from junior college through graduate school in the improvement of instruction in the humanities.

The GW grant is the result of nearly two years of curricular experimentation sponsored by the Endowment and six months of planning undertaken by a special Advisory Committee on the Humanities drawn from all GW schools and appointed by the Provost. The Advisory Committee, chaired by Professor Clarence C. Mondale, made the following points the premise for its proposal to the Endowment:

The country's universities are undergoing a crisis in legitimacy. The multiversity is in danger of losing any unifying vision of its purpose. Education can become a miscellany of courses and programs, and liberal education merely a random selection among them. Under these conditions the student resigns himself to the perfunctory process of getting a degree or resigns himself from the university altogether -- drops out. "Finally," the Advisory Committee found, "the community at large wonders at the systematic unrelatedness of the university structure, at the fact that campus and city do so little for one another."

Faced with this challenge, GW's Humanities Development Program will strive to enliven teaching, speak to the real needs of the student, and develop a genuine partnership between the University and the community. Specifically:

a. Opportunities for students -- undergraduate, graduate, and professional -- to integrate work in the community at local and national levels with study at the University will be greatly expanded. (Currently, every GW school offers some variant of work-study, and Experimental Humanities enables an advanced undergraduate to make a year-long committment to work with an urban agency for 12-20 hours a week while earning 6 credits a semester.)

b. Two new all-University courses for freshmen-level students will be offered -- one takes the District of Columbia as a learning resource, another is a 3-unit course on different topics, such as "Cybernetics and Society."

c. Field study courses for sophomores in Experimental Humanities will be expanded.

d. An annual Conference on Policy Studies and the Humanities will be held for senior level, graduate, and professional students.

Besides these curricular experiments, the University under its Humanities Development Program has established an Office of Program Development to develop an institutional structure to support these and other experiments and to develop a program to evaluate them. In addition, the University will sponsor two new program-related offices in the Consortium of Universities for evaluation and for coordination of work-study programs.

NEW OFFICE RELATES ACADEMIC PROGRAMMING TO BUDGETING--- In line with recommendations of the Commission on Governance, the University has committed itself to implementing planning, programming, budgeting cycle and has appointed a liaison officer to relate academic planning and programming to the budgeting process.

This responsibility will be carried out by Dr. Carl H. Walther, Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs. He was appointed by President Elliott and will serve as liaison officer between the Budget Office (which has the capability to do the necessary budget analyses) and the Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs (which has the responsibility and capacity for academic planning and programming).

Dr. Walther and the Director of the Budget, working together on program and budget analysis under policies established by the Budget Committee, will in effect serve as the Office of Planning and Budget.

Meanwhile, the Budget Office staff has been strengthened with the appointment of Robert D. Shoup as Assistant Director of the Budget. He was formerly a systems analyst in the Budget Office.

JAPANESE LANGUAGE TO BE GIVEN--- This fall GW will offer its first course in Japanese language. The six-hour course in beginning intensive Japanese is being given in the Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures.

The new course will be taught by Prof. Harold Chu of Georgetown under a special arrangement between George Washington and Georgetown Universities through the Consortium of Universities. The arrangement differs from the usual practice in the Consortium of sending students to other area universities to take courses not given at their home universities. In this case the special faculty resources of a sister university are being made available at the home university.

The language course is being coordinated with the inauguration of a program of Japanese studies in the Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies. In addition to current offerings in the East Asian area, courses in Japanese history, politics and economics will be introduced in the spring semester of 1972.

MAJOR FACULTY APPOINTMENTS--- The following major appointments have been made for this fall:

* Willie L. Leftwich, Visiting Professor of Law and Director of the Community Legal Clinic Project in Anacostia, currently a partner in the law firm of Hudson and Leftwich;
* David S. Rockoff, M.D., Professor and Chairman of Radiology, formerly Associate Professor of Radiology at Mallinckrodt Institute, Washington University School of Medicine, St. Louis;
* William S. Yamamoto, M.D., Professor and Chairman of Clinical Engineering, formerly Professor of Physiology at the University of Pennsylvania;
* Hyman Zimmerman, M.D., Professor of Medicine, formerly Chief of Medical Service at the Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C.;

* James Feir, Professor of Civil Engineering, formerly research officer, National Research of Canada, Ottawa.

LIBRARY RECEIVES GRANT--- As a member of the Consortium of Universities, the library has received a grant of $20,000 to develop a collection in the area of urban affairs. Accordingly, GW will acquire materials related to urban sociology, urban planning, and the urban aspects of politics and government, economics and business, environment and health, population, communications, education and law.

CLUB RESUMES A LA CARTE SERVICE--- The University Club, after trying to cut deficits with a restricted luncheon service, is resuming its a la carte service, the board of directors has announced.

The restricted service, the board said, has not been popular with faculty members. The board also stated that special party or function menus will be lowered in price.

TUNED-IN MEDICAL STUDENTS--- First-year medical students at GW are willing guinea pigs in a new research project in learning.

Each student is armed with a tape recorder, loaned by the Medical School, and will help determine the value of compressed lecture material. The compressed lectures will have unnecessary pauses eliminated from them. In addition, the students will be given tapes of lectures for review purposes.

The project is being funded by the National Institutes of Health through the Lister Hill Center for Biomedical Communications (National Library of Medicine). The $24,627 grant is being used to provide cassette recorder-playback units for each of the 123 freshman students. Project officer is Dr. Harold Wooster.

OPEN HOUSE WEDNESDAY--- The first in a series of University Open Houses with President Elliott will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. Wednesday on the terrace of the Marvin Center, located on the third floor. All members of the University community are invited.

AVERELL HARRIMAN TO TEACH AT GW--- The Honorable W. Averell Harriman, an outstanding figure in American public life for the past three decades, will teach at George Washington University this fall.

He will become GW's second Edgar R. Baker Adjunct Professor, succeeding retired Chief Justice Earl Warren, who held the position last year. The title, Adjunct Professor, is reserved for distinguished individuals who teach on a part-time basis. The position is in GW's School of Public and International Affairs.

Governor Harriman will teach a series of 10 two-hour, non credit seminars during the fall semester. The first will be held on Wednesday, Oct. 13. The series is titled: "The U.S. Involvement in World Affairs: Personal Reflections on the Last Three Decades."

GW President Lloyd H. Elliott said "the university is indeed fortunate to have a man of Governor Harriman's international stature and experience to meet regularly with students and faculty members." Dean Burton M. Sapin of GW's School of Public and International Affairs noted: "Of all living Americans, none has had greater personal involvement in the development of U.S. foreign policy since World War II than Governor Harriman. We are most pleased that he will be with us this fall."

Governor Harriman's distinguished career has included the following positions: U.S. Ambassador to Russia, 1943-46; U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain, April-Oct. 1946; Secretary of Commerce, 1946-48; U.S. Representative in Europe with the rank of Ambassador under the Economic Cooperation Act, 1948-50; Special Assistant to President Truman, 1950-51; American Representative to, and Chairman of, the NATO Committee to Study Western Defense Plans, 1951; Director of Mutual Security Administration, 1951-53; Governor of New York, 1955-58; Ambassador-at-Large, 1961, 1965-68; Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, 1961-63; Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, 1963-65; and personal representative of President

The Baker Adjunct Professorship at GW was created by Mrs. Edgar R. Baker of New York City in memory of her husband, who was Director of Corporate Development and Vice President of Time, Inc., at the time of his death in June, 1969.

Mr. Baker, a Washington native, was a Trustee and Phi Beta Kappa graduate of George Washington. He served as national chairman of the University's Annual Support Program from 1963 to 1965. He joined Time, Inc., in 1944 and later became managing director of Time-Life International, which during his tenure grew into a farflung international publishing organization.

NEW STATIONERY AUTHORIZED--- New University stationery has been approved by President Elliott and may be ordered through the Office of Printing and Graphics. When ordering stationery, specify "old" or "new." The "old" (present) stationery will be available until the paper stock is exhausted. Samples of the new stationery may be seen at the Printing and Graphics Office.

DRUG POLICY CLARIFIED--- The following letter about University drug policy has been distributed by the Division of Student Affairs to students in residence halls:

> The illegal use of drugs and its implications have become an increasing concern of The George Washington University. The University's policy regarding the use of illegal drugs is stated on Page 480 of the Appendix to the University Bulletin:
> > "The University cannot condone violations of law, including violation of those laws which proscribe possession, use, sale, or distribution of certain drugs. Members of the academic community should know that administrative action, which may include dismissal from the residence halls, revocation of other privileges, or suspension or dismissal from the University, may be taken in order to protect the interests of the University and the rights of others."
> Some points concerning this policy should be clarified. Our approach to the illegal presence and use of drugs on the campus combines counseling and disciplinary action. While the University is not a law enforcement agency, neither is it willing or permitted by law to provide protection for those members of its community who choose to act outside the law. Disciplinary action has been taken against violators of the University's drug policy and will be taken in the future when violations occur. In addition, every member of the University community should be aware that the University cannot prevent civil authorities from entering residence halls or other buildings.
> In group living situations, such as in residence halls, it is especially important that individual rights be considered and respected. The welfare of roommates and other residents is potentially jeopardized if illegal drugs are brought into the halls.

Each student is encouraged to consider all the ramifications of using drugs. If any student would like to discuss his or her own involvement and dilemmas with drugs, the University Counseling Center and the Psychiatrist at the University Health Service offer confidential services. The staff of the Dean of Students Office including the residence hall staff are also available for personal consultation.

LIBRARY RECEIVES MICROBOOK LIBRARY GRANT--- The library has received a grant of $40,000 from the National Home Libary Foundation of Washington to install a set of the Encyclopaedia Britannica's ultra-microfiche "Library of American Civilization." The library will make the collection available to the community during 1972. The "Library of American Civilization" consists of approximately 13,500 3 x 5 microfiches containing some 20,000 volumes of monographic and journal titles covering all aspects of American life up to World War I. Its installation at GW will be accompanied both by printed catalogs of the collection and a regular set of the catalog cards for each of the 13,500 titles, as well as by table readers, portable readers, and a reader-printer for those users desiring hard copy.

CONSORTIUM FUNDS AVAILABLE--- $150,000 will be available this year to area institutions of higher education for community service and continuing education programs. Faculty members interested in making application for grants from these funds should contact Mr. Shidler or Mrs. Marguerite Beatty at the Consortium (462-4868). ENROLLMENT UP--- Latest registration figures for this fall show a total on-campus enrollment of 15,190, an increase of 192 over Fall, 1970. Total new freshmen are down 181 (141 of these are women), but total undergraduates are down only 32, due in part to the largest influx of transfer students in the past five years. Graduate enrollment is up by 166. GW's average student hour load dropped, however, from 9.87 in 1970 to 9.76 in 1971, representing a loss in financial income of about $100,000.

	Total Undergraduate Students	Total Graduate & Professional Students	Total Non Degree Students	Total Students
Fall, 1970	5,618	6,977	2,403	14,998
Fall, 1971	5,586	7,143	2,461	15,190

VAN EVERA MEMORIALIZED--- Dr. Benjamin D. Van Evera, a member of the GW faculty from 1925 until his death in 1970, was memorialized recently by the Human Resources Research Organization (HumRRO), an Alexandria-headquartered research-and-development organization.

HumRRO named its central library The Van Evera Library and contributed $3,000 to the University's Van Evera Memorial Fund.

The fund will be used to make an annual award to the outstanding instructor among the University's graduate students in chemistry. Dr. Van Evera taught chemistry throughout his 45-year career at GW.

MEDICAL CENTER COMPUTER--- The Medical Center has recently taken delivery on a minicomputer, the PDP-12 manufactured by the Digital Equipment Corporation. This versatile machine provides both digital and analog input and output capabilities. It consists of two different computers, the LINC developed under NIH and NASA support, and the popular PDP-8, which share the eight thousand 12 bit words of core memory. Programs previously written for either machine can be run on the PDP-12. Inexpensive magnetic tape bulk storage, punched paper tape processing, a cathode ray tube view screen, data communication capabilities as well as a portable remote terminal are features of the current $45,000 acquisition which was made possible by extramural and intramural resources from the Departments of Anatomy, Medicine and Physiology.

The equipment is housed in the Department of Physiology under the direction of Charles S. Tidball, Henry D. Fry Professor of Physiology. It will be used, among other purposes, for computer-assisted education, data acquisition, data reduction, and "on line" control of physiological experiments. A time-sharing plan permitting several users to utilize the PDP-12 simultaneously is under development. Those interested in using the computer should contact Dr. Tidball.

BOARD CHAIRMAN TO SPEAK--- E. K. Morris, chairman of GW's Board of Trustees, will address the Rotary Club of Washington Wednesday on "Fifty Years of Washington Confusion." Oct. 27 is the 50th anniversary of Mr. Morris' arrival in Washington.

TROUBADOURS SING--- The GW Troubadours, reorganized by Stephen Prussing, director of University choral groups, sang Saturday night at the United Nations Annual Concert at the Washington Hilton.

The program, a salute to Irving Berlin, also included the Radio City Rockettes and various movie, stage, and television stars.

GW OFFERS ART THERAPY PROGRAM--- George Washington University has initiated a new, multidisciplinary master's degree program in art therapy, the field which uses art as a vehicle for the psychotherapeutic expression of personal problems.

The program is given in accordance with the University's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences newly developed degree, the Master of Arts in Special Studies.

The 30-hour course of study bridges many disciplines--- psychology, art, psychiatry, education, and rehabilitation. The art therapy courses themselves are built upon the foundation laid by the Washington School of Psychiatry and will be taught in its specialized facility.

Master's candidates must have some experience in the graphic and plastic arts. Applications for the term begining in February 1972 are due by Jan. 1.

The degree in art therapy, which can be achieved on a part-time basis, combines both theory and practice, as well as emphases on adults, children, and the family.

The program in art therapy is coordinated by Bernard I. Levy, Professor of Psychology, and Elinor Ulman, Assistant Professorial Lecturer, who is the founder-publisher of the American Journal of Art Therapy.

Hanna Yaxa Kwiatkowska,, Assistant Professorial Lecturer, is also a consultant in art therapy to the National Institute of Mental Health. Mrs. Kwiatkowska is known for her research and clinical work in the frontier of family art therapy. She will teach seminars in the techniques of art therapy and the use of art in work with families.

As the program develops, Edith Kramer, author of Art Therapy in a Children's Community and Art as Therapy with Children, will teach highly specialized and advanced seminars in art therapy with children.

Although its roots span many years, art therapy has just recently become an organized discipline whose methods and insights are an aid in the communication of psychological insights. Where practiced, it is an integral part of mental health activities.

The introductory courses in art therapy are open to interested students in related fields.

Further information can be provided by Arthur E. Burns, Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.

STUDENTS UTILIZE CONSORTIUM--- Through the Consortium of Universities of the Washington Metropolitan Area, Inc., GW students can take specialized courses offered at any of the other four major universities in the District of Columbia-- American, Catholic, Georgetown, and Howard.
